Discussion Questions

1. In the beginning of the novel, Cutuk, Iris, and Jerry express great excitement whenever they hear the “sounds of travelers” approaching. How is the idea of “traveler sounds” returned to later in the book? How would you describe the change in feelings such sounds elicit in Cutuk at these later points?
2. Throughout the novel, and especially during “Part I: The Land,” Cutuk wants very much to become Eskimo. One outward manifestation of this is the habit of “flattening his nose.” Another is his repeated wish for the material things—the nylon jackets and snowgos—that the younger Eskimos in Takunak desire. But what he has learned from both Abe and Eruk is how to live the way Eskimos used to live. How, then, does he negotiate these two worlds as a child? How does he negotiate them after he’s grown? And in what way of being in the world does he ultimately adopt?
3. Why did Cutuk’s mother leave? What effect does her leaving have on him? On Abe? Jerry? Iris? Why does the family so rarely speak of her?
4. Cutuk, Iris, and Jerry share an interesting relationship with their father, who is “like an older brother, our best friend, no dad at all.” Why has Abe chosen to have this kind of brotherly relationship with his children? What are some of the effects of this?
5. What are some of the childhood values and lessons Cutuk learns from Abe? How do these values serve him once he goes to Anchorage? How do they fail? Which ones does he hold on to? Which ones does he let go?
6. Discuss Cutuk’s relationship with his two siblings, Jerry and Iris. Why does Iris play a much greater role in Cutuk’s life than Jerry seems to? What significance is there in Jerry’s reappearance, after a long five-year absence? How do these relationships compare or contrast with Cutuk’s relationship with his father and mother?
7. What surprises Cutuk about his interactions with white people—“his people”—in Anchorage? If he doesn’t belong to them, and he doesn’t belong to the Eskimos, to whom does he belong?
8. Why does it become so important to Cutuk that he learn to fly his grandfather’s plane?
9. What is Cutuk’s attitude toward money? What role does it play in his life?
10. What is the relationship between Cutuk’s story and the short passages about the wolves? What does it mean that most of these passages involve scenes of wolves being hunted and killed? What is the meaning of the scene in which Cutuk and the wolves see one another?
11. What does Cutuk mean when he says “I’m not going to be a dog. I’ll take the wolf’s deal”?
